"The South 40" by JAMES A. SMITH EXTENSION AGENT

The long awaited, first yearling sale of the season was held Thursday in Lynchburg. Over the years, Lynchburg has followed Richmond, but Richmond elected to hold a later yearling sale this year.

In talking with potential buyers, it was rather obvious that they didn't know what to expect and were much like the producers - just waiting to see what would happen.

A total of 1,102 head were sold. The 897 steers averaging 663 pounds sold for an average of $56.00 up $14.64 per hundred over $972 or an increase of 34%.

The 205 heifers averaged 516 pounds and brought an average $49.56 up $11.64 from last year or a 30% increase.

Thursday night at Hollins, steers averaged 739 pounds and sold for $55.95 up $16.08 from a year earlier.

The lighter weights had a higher increase in value than did the heavier weights.

For the two sales, 550 pound steers were up $19.50 per CWT, 650 pound steers up $16.00, 750 pound cattle up $15.00, 850 pound up $13.75, 950 pound up $13.00 and 1050 pound cattle up $10.75.

Appomattox cattlemen had the largest consignment ever to a yearling sale. In addition to those named last week, Dancy McCraw and Hugh Braford had cattle in the sale.

Dark tobacco growers should take a look at another variety that we haven't pushed very hard but should be considered for 1974 planting. It's Virginia 309 and carries good resistance to Black Shank. In 1972 it had a yield of 2137 pounds and a value of $1490 in the Virginia tests.

In last year's test, the closest variety to it was Virginia 312 which yielded 2039 pounds and a value of $1396.

Seed will be available for '74 planting.

Last Tuesday, we weighed in 69 junior bulls at the Red House Evaluation Center.

There are 129 bulls on test. I hope all of our beef cattle producers will make a point of going by the Red House Center this fall and looking at these bulls. You'll like 'em.

The Environmental Protection Agency says that a cow's burp pollutes. In fact the agency contends that cows in this country burp over 50 million tons of hydrocarbon into the atmosphere every year. As you know, hydrocarbons are one of the major air pollutants generally associated with motor vehicles and are a major component of smog in cities like New York and Los Angeles. EPA adds that 10 cows burp enough gas to heat a small home, but there's no indication what constitutes a small home or just how one is supposed to convert the burped gas to heat.

If someone can come up with a practical suggestion, we'll have a new energy source to market.

The September 1 crop forecast points to a new record.

Nationally, corn for grain is 5,768 million bushels up 4 percent over last year.

Winter wheat is forecast at 1,291 million bushels up 9 percent above last year.

Soybeans are projected at 1,599 million bushels up 25 percent over 1972.

IN Virginia, dark tobacco is estimated to be 6.125 million pounds up 32 percent over last year.
